

MERRILL POLICE DEPARTMENT

The Merrill Police Department was created when the City of Merrill was incorporated and Mayor T. B. Scott appointed a City Marshal, Constables, and policemen. The Department had a number of growing pains in its first year and City records show seven different men appointed to different law enforcement positions during the first six months.

The times reflected the era the City was in and the members of the Department were appointed by the mayor. Each succeeding mayor then appointed his own Police Department. Tenure was unheard of and the Police Officers served at the pleasure of the Mayor.

The early records of the Merrill Police Department are non-existent and only by researching City Council action and newspaper accounts can a rough idea of the police agency be assembled. It is known that these men were a hardy breed, much like the citizens they served. They worked seven days a week and were allowed one Sunday off a month. The officers were assigned a section of town (Eastside, Westside or Sixth Ward) and it was their responsibility to see that order was maintained. These officers did not have any of the equipment that is commonplace in today's world. They worked without telephones, radios, patrol cars and computers. They relied on their wit and physical ability to handle any situation that would arise in their district. The rules could be broken down to several easy to follow ones but it basically was that if it happened in your section you were to take care of the matter.

The City was a difficult beat to walk in those early days. The citizens were living in what were still rough times and the influx of lumberjacks or transients added to the Patrolman's problems. An example of the difficulties these men had in performing their duties is indicated in City records when on February 10, 1890, the City approved a total of $142.75 to various doctors in Merrill for attending to the Police Officers. The situation was not all take and no give. For on August 11, 1890, City records show that the City allowed payment of more doctor bills in the amount of $84.00. The records do not indicate what these charges represented. However, the amounts were to be deducted from the officers' monthly salaries.

The Department continued on in this manner for approximately twenty years with each incoming Mayor appointing his Police Force and in doing so usually discharged the previous members. The newspaper stories on these appointments show they were not made on merit and at times the editor completely disagreed with the Mayor and gave a scathing report on the worth of the appointments.

The Chief of Police served his term at an annual salary not to exceed $400.00 and his duties also included being the Chief of the Fire Department. The salary was slowly increased and the Chief was able to forego the firefighting part of law enforcement. The Patrolmen were making $40.00 monthly at the time.

Record keeping by the Merrill Police Department did not start in earnest for many years. The earliest records are a ledger book started in the late 1890's that listed action taken by the Department. This was a running total of arrest and/or incarcerations the different officers made and the dispositions of each. This was probably done more as a record of moneys received in fines than as a record of criminal activity.

The early ledgers show a wide assortment of arrests and the penalties were equally varied. There were many instances of disorderly conduct, public drunkenness or fighting. These were usually resolved with a fine of $1.00 to $5.00. There seemed to be a difference in the state of drunkenness as the records show many times that people were locked in the City jail for being a "harmless drunk." These people were not fined but the tally sheet for each showed that he was allowed to sober up, given a stern lecture and then released.

It seems that if a person did anything more serious he was dealt with severely. Any crime more than simple larceny was handled by the person being sent to a State institution. Juveniles were not treated any easier. Police records for July 2, 1900 show that three girls, ages 14, 12 and 9, were brought in for larceny and each were fined $50.00 plus court costs, a staggering amount for anybody at the turn of the century.

Officers still walked their own sections of town and had a small building to do his reports or hold any prisoners. Telephones were added to these buildings in later years and the officer could call for assistance or learn of any complaints he had to act on. A light was installed on the top of City Hall and this could be observed from different vantage points in the City. When an officer saw the light was on, he merely called the station and learned what had to be done.

In 1916, the Department purchased a Model T Ford to aid in their work. A motorcycle was added in the 1930's and 1940's for traffic patrol but it wasn't until 1949 that a second squad car was added. The officers had a squad car but it wasn't until 1948 that the Department had radios to contact the car.

The officers' work schedule slowly changed over the years also. Where the officers could once count on one Sunday off a month, the Department went to an eight day rotation where the officer worked seven days and then received one day off. George Severt was on the force when this change took place and recalled how this work arrangement seemed like a gift from heaven. In 1950, the Department again changed its work schedule. The eight day rotation was kept but the officers worked six days in a row and received two days off. Many of our retired officers remember this change and how it seemed that being off two days in a row was the ideal arrangement. Two officers were added to the Department in order to implement this schedule.

The old City Hall not only housed the Police Department, but also the City Jail. This consisted of three cells in the basement of the City Hall and was used for both overnight lodging and serving of sentences of 15 to 30 or more days.

The record keeping at the Police Department remained in the hands of the Chief and his ledger book until well into the 1940's. Their records were still a bookkeeping system with each action taken by the Department duly listed. The traffic violations were listed next to the ordinance violations and these were next to any criminal charges. There was no effort to make an individual record for any person. The ledger book gave way to a record system that not only went to individual listings but cross-referenced all incidents for easy access. The Department has now converted many of these records to a computer system.
